of three other national institutions since that period gives us a plausible ground for presuming, that this really valuably accession to the stores of Welsh literature will not be lost for want of adequate encouragement. Carpe diem ought to be the rule of the Societies on this occasion.

REPORT OF THE WREXHAM EISTEDDFOD.—This Report, which has been prepared under the able superintendence of the Rev. W. J. Rees, of Cascob, will, in all probability, be ready for publication, early this month. And, as considerable pains have been taken to render it an accurate record of all the late proceedings at Wrexham, it cannot fail to be perused with an interest proportionate with that, which was excited by the Eisteddfod itself.

INSTANCES OF LONGEVITY.

There is now living in the parish of Llanberis, Carnarvonshire, an ancient couple, whose united ages amount to 182 years: the husband, Morris Davies, being 89 and his wife 93. They have been united in the bands of Hymen 64 years, and have 132 descendants now living, of whom 10 are their own children, 66 grand-children, and 56 great-grand-children. The old man is sufficiently well to attend Church every Sunday; but his more aged partner has been, for some time, bed-ridden. They are so poor, as to receive parochial relief.

In the same neighbourhood lives also Ellen Owen, at the advanced age of 95. She goes regularly to the mountain to collect turf and heath, and can walk to Carnarvon, a distance of nine miles, and back in the same day.

To these living examples may be subjoined the two following of persons recently deceased.
